The Andy Warhol Museum is partnering with the Alzheimer Disease Research Center (ADRC) at the University of Pittsburgh to offer a new program for individuals experiencing memory loss or other cognitive changes. This innovative project promotes creative expression and socialization by using a combination of guided tours, small group discussions, and art making inspired by the Warhol tradition.

Individuals with mild-moderate cognitive/memory impairment and a friend or relative are invited to take part in this project. Groups of four to eight people will meet at the Warhol Museum on a weekday for the activity. The next program is scheduled for March 24, 2016 from 10:00am to 12:30pm.
